Apple is a master of innovation. Their strategy focuses on creating high-quality, user-friendly products that disrupt the market. By combining cutting-edge technology with sleek design, they've consistently stayed ahead of the competition.

For instance, an AI innovation leader technology company would have to create a mission statement that will clearly define its vision for technology innovation, research, and customer-oriented solutions. Without vision and mission, companies can fail to align strategies with growth targets and market demands.

The vision is the future long-term desire of the company, answering where the company wants to be in the future. The mission articulates the reason why, the values, and how the company is going to achieve its vision.

Once they've been answered, leaders can begin the work of aligning activities with a core competitive theme and of creating an organizational context – for example, a collaborative culture – that ensures employees and managers are committed to making the strategy work.
